Nature
From the dramatic Zhangjiajie National Forest Park to Tianmen Mountain, Hunan Province is home to some of China’s most breathtaking surroundings. These spectacular landscapes will inspire your imagination with their captivating sandstone and quartzite forests. With its many mountainous regions, abundant waterways and lush forests, there are countless wonders just waiting to be explored.

A survey of 1,782 Brits revealed the traits they associate with being a ‘good tourist’, including making an effort to learn more about the culture and customs of holiday destinations.

HOLIDAY TRANSFERS specialists Taxi2Airport.com surveyed 1,782 Brits to discover the traits they most associate with being a ‘good tourist’, and sought to find out the factors preventing Brits from taking a more active approach towards learning more about a particular culture.

Taxi2Airport found that the majority of Brits (81%) believe for an individual to be a good tourist that they should make the effort to learn a few basic words and/or phrases (e.g. hello, thank you, bye etc.) in the language of the country they are visiting. Thereafter, 75% feel controlled alcohol consumption is very important for a person who is in a foreign destination. Especially true, given British tourists notorious reputation of being rowdy and uncontrollable when drinking too much.

In third position, 70% think it is better not to talk about sensitive topics (e.g. economic/political/social issues etc.) in public, as it may cause offense or provoke a negative reaction from the visiting countries local citizens.

Interestingly, 54% consider trying domestic cuisines/eating at local restaurants a fundamental part of being a good tourist. While 51% share the same sentiment about trying to shop at local stores and buying domestically produced products/souvenirs where possible.

On the other end, just 26% place a willingness to use public transport (e.g. local buses, trains, trams etc.) in the travelling country as a major part of being a good tourist. Slightly higher, 37% said that not expressing in public any grievances or frustrations about the quality and price of tourist attractions was an essential trait for a well-mannered traveller.

The survey found that more than half of UK holidaymakers (52%) don’t find out about the culture and customs of a country before travelling, citing time restraints as the reason.

SUBLIME SARDINIA

Sardinia’s wild scenery, clean sea, warm weather, sunshine almost all year round, tasty gastronomy, local organic wine and friendly locals make it a unique destination, says Ilenia Cocco from the Italian Tourist Board.

THE BEST times of year to visit Sardinia are March through to early June and September through to November. Spring, early summer and autumn are the best seasons to enjoy everything this island has to offer. The island is not too crowded, temperatures never fall below 25 degrees during the day and rarely above 30 degrees. Sardinia displays the jewels of its thousands of years of history. The island is a treasure in which festivals, customs, artistic handicrafts and delicacies, celebrations of sacred rituals all shine on. All year, visitors are inspired by the events and traditions that have been handed down over the centuries.

“A few days in Sant’Antioco island in mainland South Sardinia, with a few nights in Cagliari makes it the perfect place to recharge your batteries,” says Ilenia Cocco from the Italian Tourist Board.

The best beach is the 8km stretch of sand at Poetto, Cagliari, with turquoise sea, cafes and bars.

And the ultimate must-see? The wild flamingos, which have lived in natural habitats for 40 years.

I FEEL sorry for those who lost their jobs in the wake of the Thomas Cook collapse, but it was pleasing to see the industry rally around and offer support. It was a shrewd move by Hays Travel to acquire the 555 retail outlets of Thomas Cook from under the noses of its competitors. It’s great for staff who will be re-employed, but I am sure there will be a review of the shops that are uneconomic. There will be a number of towns with multiple Hays branches so it will be interesting to see how many remain open in a year’s time. Hays Travel received great PR with John and Irene portrayed as the saviours of the high street— I wish them every success. Many other retailers have announced expansion plans, showing confidence in the high street for travel retailing.

We are seeing the knock-on effects of the collapse, such as job losses at airports around the country, hoteliers losing millions around the world and lost forward bookings. There are many other sectors affected too. The consequences will be felt by businesses and employees for a long time.

For operators without an airline, there is a shortage of seats on many routes and prices will remain higher than they would have been in the short term. Operators who had seats on Thomas Cook aircraft are sourcing alternative airlines. It is an opportunity for big operators to add extra capacity and dominate the market further. TUI has announced 2 million extra holidays for next year and Jet2 is planning to expand. Everyone should see this as a huge opportunity, as there are millions of holidaymakers who would have travelled with Thomas Cook who are now looking for alternatives. We need to get the message out that customers should book through their friendly, knowledgeable local travel agent. They are there to help and advise—and to help when things go wrong. The media can be unhelpful.

I watched Good Morning Britain after the Thomas Cook collapse and a guest said: “Nobody books through travel agents these days.” Luckily, Kate Garraway interrupted and said: “Well, I do!”. Many operators have taken a serious financial hit and I hope everyone can see their way through this storm. There are many rumours on social media about who is “the next to go”. We need to be careful about speculating without facts and help each other to get through this. The one thing that has emerged is that the financial protection and bonding system needs a full review. Have ABTA and the CAA been effective and do they have the necessary robust measures in place? It seems unfair that the ATOL holder has to take full financial responsibility and face financial loss, potentially jeopardising their business through no fault of their own. The government is expected to announce an airline insolvency review and there will be calls for change. Some are calling for the APC of £2.50 to be increased. The government already collects enough money from every airline ticket sold with APD. Perhaps some of it should be used to provide protection? We need to learn lessons and make changes.

The CAA has undertaken the largest repatriation since WWII in bringing home stranded holidaymakers. It seems ridiculous that aircraft are flown in from around the world at great expense to undertake these flights while Thomas Cook aircraft are sitting idly at UK airports. Why not just continue the scheduled flying on those aircraft with the same crew to bring everyone home?

The one issue that arises was, should those without ATOL protection have been brought home? The simple answer is “no” in my opinion. Why not charge a levy on all seats sold so everyone is protected?

The Thomas Cook collapse will be a monumental day in the history of the travel industry.

Why kids prefer the iPad to I-spy on long journeys

IT’S GAME over for family classic car games as technology is killing off sing songs and I-spy, emphasising that now more than ever, staying connected has become an essential part of travelling, especially for the younger demographic. As such, agents should keep a lookout for offers which include internet connection on flights and even in hire cars.

According to the data of 2,000 parents, the average British family takes at least three long road trips a year. However, 38 percent of families never play I-Spy on a car journey any more, while 36 percent have never sung “ten green bottles” with their children, due to the use of iPads, in-car entertainment and music streaming. The findings revealed that 54% of adults miss playing the games they played with their parents such as I-Spy, 20 questions and the license plate game while travelling.

Shakila Ahmed from Travelodge, who commissioned the poll said that smartphones and tablets had “driven long established activities such as: playing I spy and singing car tunes such as Ten Green Bottles into the history books.”

CROATIA’S THIRD-largest city and biggest seaport Rijeka takes the baton as the European Capital of Culture – along with Galway in Ireland – with expectations of welcoming more than one million visitors next year. This shouldn’t be too difficult to achieve, as Brits already flock to Dubrovnik which is the UK’s number one destination due to the Unesco listed Old City, the Game of Thrones and its 250 days of sunshine in a year.

Further up the coast, the Dalmatian region has seen a 5% increase in arrivals and a 2% rise in overnight stays up to September 2019, according to the Croatian National Tourist Board. While thousands fly into Split and sail to the islands of Hvar and Brac, Rijeka will no doubt become the new corner of Croatia to discover. This lesser known city also sits on the sparkling Adriatic, in Primorje-Gorski Kotar County overlooking the Kvarner Gulf.

It has been described as a city that stands for “its libertarian spirit, vibrant cultural scene and social and cultural diversity” by tourism bosses.

Staying true to Croatia’s promise of sunshine, history and beauty, this harbour city has beaches, the ancient fortress of Trsat Castle and attracts cruise ships, ferries and catamarans for island hopping adventures to Krk and Cres.

As part of the “Capital of Culture” preparations, the ship Galeb has been transformed into a floating museum to become one of the cultural highlights of the city. The vessel once belonged to the Yugoslav President Tito and was visited by Winston Churchill when it sailed up the River Thames.

Events during the year include the Carnival Parade in February and gala concerts and exhibitions by well renowned artists.

Close to Rijeka lies Opatija - once the home of European royalty and today a wellness destination with numerous spas, health centres and the Thalassotherapia hospital at the forefront of medical treatments.

As well as all this cultural activity, Croatia’s capital city Zagreb takes over the presidency of the European Union for the first half of the year. From January to June, this will bring its own calendar of political events.

There’s a buzz of excitement for the year ahead says Darija Reic, director of the Croatian National Tourist Board in London. “We are incredibly excited for what’s in store for Croatia in 2020. Hosting a rich and delightful programme featuring some of Croatia’s and Europe’s finest artists, Rijeka will be showcasing everything it stands for - its libertarian spirit, vibrant cultural scene and social and cultural diversity. From the internationally reputable Carnival Parade in February to the gala concerts and exhibitions by well renowned artists, Rijeka is the hotspot for every culture buff, all year round.”

THE EXCITEMENT of autumn means the truffle season is under way in Istria.

This Croatian treat is a valuable delicacy with the most foraged-for item being the white truffle. The season starts in September and brings months of searching and sniffing for hunting experts and their sharp-nosed hounds.

Locals and travellers can sip, savour and sample regional wines, try truffle-infused delicacies and taste the world’s finest olive oils. New for 2020 is a special range of hotels under the banner of ‘Time of Your Life’, exclusively for the over 50s. There are nine hotels in this range, offering benefits such as no single supplements, free language classes and a free day trip.

Chris Ran at Balkan Holidays said: “Selling Balkan Holidays couldn’t be easier. My team on the road is ready to train and help any agents across the UK.”

DITCH CHRISTMAS shopping at home and head to Zagreb, which has won the best Christmas Market destination in Europe three times in a row.

Come the end of the November, the city is taken over with the underground Christmas fairy tale in the Gric tunnel to the upper town connected with the shortest and oldest funicular in the world. There’s the Christmas tree on Ban Josip Jelačić Square, lantern lit avenues and street performances that turn the city into a magical Christmas experience.

At just over two hours from Heathrow with direct links all year round, the Croatian capital also has six new luxury hotels and intends to break the record of 127,000 visitors who visited in December last year. It also expects a boost in consumer spending in the range of £50 million.
